kaleidoscopes

light in-formation

BY LARA AND TURID

The Kaleidoscope was invented as an optical instrument in 1816 by Sir David Brewster. Over the years that followed, many different styles and transformations of the design have occurred. It has served as a toy to amuse children with endless imagination stimulation, a parlor entertainment for adults, and a design palette for artists, jewelers, architects, weavers, and any profession in which symmetrical and ornamental patterns are required. It is also a meditation in motion, a holographic formation creating a frequency to open the door into this Self within? The words 'medicine' and 'meditation' come from the same root. According to Osho in Walking in Zen, Sitting in Zen, meditation is the ultimate medicine: 'It cures you of all ills'. The Mandala 'Sacred Circle' is one of the most compelling symbols of humankind. Its circular form and concentric structure reflect the shape of the universe outside and the sense of perfection within. Concentration on its form and content is an aid to prayer and meditation, leading to complete at-oneness with the world.

"In symmetry there is balance, in balance there is harmony, in harmony equilibrium. As long as we are perfectly balanced, we cannot fall. As long as we do not fall, we continue to survive. Survival is the ultimate and perpetual striving of all living things, from the most primitive to the most sophisticated being. Somewhere therein lies the relationship between the universal appeal of kaleidoscope mandala's, the inspiration of beauty, the wonder of nature, and the awesome magnificence of Creation itself."

[David Kalish, Kaleidoscope Artist]

Kaleidoscope images hold an endless range of subtle light combinations that illuminate body, mind and Soul. Much like the internet's search engines connect to computers around the world, and can deliver you information related to specific words, kaleidoscopes speak to your Soul through Ancient symbols to help process thoughts and emotions. Light activates your imagination, light is amplified through the mirrored prism and spirals towards us in harmonious geometric formations that nourish our bodies, and feed our Souls. Light is information.

'The real voyage of discovery comes not in seeking new landscapes but in having new eyes.'

[Marcel Proust]

"the personality is like a complex mandala that is formed from these splintered parts in addition to the parts that are not splintered. It comes directly from the parts of the soul that the Soul has chosen to work on in this lifetime"

[Gary Zukav]

Deep inside your core
There is a tightly furled bud
Thirsting for its nurture juice

A fountain of color-sound
Will swell your bud
And release its petals
Into your own
Tumescient
Universe
How?

Light - Medicine of the Future

Light holds the secret! We are creatures of light, we eat light, and breathe in light, we are made up of light. We are alive because of the light our Sun provides.

Nuclear fusion is at the heart of the Sun. Combine this light together with every star you see or imagine and you get a very clear picture of how much 'light' is around us. A kaleidoscope is made up of mirrors, and mirrors reflect the magical light of 3 dimensional reality. Reality is made up of light waves called photons. Light enters the mirrored prism, spiraling into new vistas and light landscapes dancing in perfect symmetry. This delight is carried from your eye to various parts of the brain, channeling through the pineal gland and the limbic centre, evoking a range of emotions and responses in the body.

Colour also plays an important role in our lives, both macro and microscopically. It affects our moods and also causes physiological changes. All organic cells react to the colours that they are exposed to. Organs and glands vibrate at different frequencies which harmonize with different colour vibrations, this allows colour to rejuvenate body and mind.

Each kaleidoscope that we create has a unique colour combination and with every new image the exploding colour brings your imagination to life. Dream images that open your mind's eye to a little taste of 'forgotten home'.

Colour illumination, which is the type of light experienced when looking through a kaleidoscope, has an instantaneous soothing and energizing effect. This combined with the rhythmical changing patterns creates a unique form of meditation.

Ancient Egyptian Kaleidoscopic Star Gate

Kaleidoscopes are Star Gates. Kaleidoscopes reflect light into perfect symmetrical circles of light, Star Gates are devices which focus LIGHT. They facilitate the transition from one level of conscious awareness to a higher level of consciousness.

The ancient Egyptians used to create a kaleidoscope star gate, to help focus the mind as a tool. They balanced large polished pieces of black slate in a triangular formation with a bon-fire at the centre burning against the night sky. One by one, sometimes many at a time, they would dance, becoming entranced by watching the circle of light. This ritual of entering a circle becomes a meditation, which means 'to go to your center'. In most ancient cultures this is a way of accessing the 'spirit world', where the light threads and fibres of life's underlying Universal Truths reside.

Our evolution has involved expansion through invention, with the invention of the optical telescope, followed by the microscope. These optical instruments work by taking concentrated rays of light and magnifying images not able to be seen by the naked eye and showing us the microscopic building blocks of reality. We are now able, with the help of these optical instruments to explore our Solar System and the body's microscopic landscape. It is by looking at images of stars being born and the magic happenings in the cellular dimension that our consciousness has naturally expanded, enabling us to view our selves and our world in new ways.

We are becoming increasingly aware of our multi-dimensional Soul "Self". Research reveals that a variety of different channels can be accessed within different light frequencies, an array of archetypal energies. This phenomenon is expressed and validated by many in the esoteric and healing field. Many are finding that the missing links are encrypted within the chakras which are the energy points that "plug us in". These are generated and vitalised by sound and colour. It's time to connect the dots.

The Seat of the Soul

We are descendants of cosmic light. In us is a purity of being that transcends any or all self limitations. We are Beings embracing Spirit and Nature, many of us have lost our sense of centre and need to remember what makes us feel good. Just as good music moves the body with its uplifting vibration, colours in a specific combination and pattern create images that enhance your 'tune' and move you closer towards your Soul's Truth.

As we begin to remember and embrace our spiritual quest on this journey in life, our understanding expands our multi-dimensionality. So begins a journey towards creating peace and harmony through Wisdom, by using this delightful optical tool for inspiring harmonious future visions.

Open yourself to the light, the magic of color!
